

Lochalsh & Skye
Energy Advice Service

A free service for all households
and community organisations in Lochalsh, Skye
and Raasay

Telephone:

The Energy Advice Service is provided by Lochalsh & Skye Housing Association to give people advice and support that will help them to have warmer homes and lower fuel bills.

There is no charge for the Energy Advice Service. All you have to do is to phone up and ask for someone to visit. One of the team will then get back in touch to arrange a suitable time.

Once we have carried out a survey of your house and talked to you about your energy bills, we will produce a report and then arrange to come and discuss it with you.

We will also be able to refer you to the Handyperson or Care & Repair services run by the Housing Association, as well as organisations such as Citizens Advice, Community Energy Scotland and The Highland Council as appropriate.

The Energy Advice Service can help you by:

- suggesting ways of reducing your fuel consumption and, hopefully, your fuel bills
- looking at your heating system and appliances to assess their energy efficiency
- checking if you are losing heat through walls, windows, doors and floors
- advising on how to reduce heat loss
- advising if someone in the household is eligible for the Scottish Government's Energy Assistance Package

Advice and Assistance for Community Groups

The Energy Advice Service aims to reduce carbon emissions as well as energy bills, so we are keen to work with communities to find ways of reducing energy consumption. We can help to identify potential funding for projects that will benefit the wider community, such as improvements to village halls to make them more energy efficient, or assist with getting renewable energy projects underway.

We can also come along to meetings of community groups to give general advice to people about energy efficiency.
